Teatro de la Luna Launches “Thursdays for All”

Fueled by a desire to put professional theater within reach of everyone in the greater metropolitan area, regardless of financial means, Teatro de la Luna is launching “Thursdays for All” in conjunction with its winter play “La Vida Que Me Das... y no me alcanza” (Such a Life You’ve Given Me... and it’s not enough).

All Thursday evening tickets during the play’s run, from Feb. 13 through March 9, 2014, are available at $15.

“The metropolitan area is rich with live theater – that is one of this area’s great assets – but too often the ticket prices are out of reach for people,” said Nucky Walder, Teatro de la Luna’s producer. “At Teatro de la Luna, we want everyone to have an opportunity to see award-winning works from Latin America. We also want theater lovers to have a chance to witness the fine Spanish-speaking acting talent in our area. That’s why we’re offering extra-low ticket prices one night a week.”

“La Vida Que Me Das... y no me alcanza” is the work of well-known Argentine playwright Susana Torres Molina. Through humor, it examines women’s relationship to motherhood – and sexuality.

In addition to “Thursdays for All”, Teatro de la Luna offers other bargains for budget-conscious theater patrons. Sunday matinees tickets are $25 per person, compared to the regular admission of $35. And La Luna offers a 10 percent discount on tickets for groups of 10 or more. Free parking is available at the theater venue, Gunston Arts Center.

Reservations can be made on-line at www.teatrodelaluna.org

Limited Number of Tickets are also available through www.ticketplace.org and www.goldstar.com
